

NOTES

CASE STUDY: “Decisions, decisions.”

Sue is a professing Christian that works with Betty, who also professes Christ. She sees Betty at work and starts to tear down the boss.

“Can you believe what Mr. Smith asked me to do?! He asked me to clean up the bathroom! That is NOT in my job description! It’s not my fault that customers or co-workers made a mess in there. I told him flat out that I just wouldn’t do it! Who does he think he is? I’ve got half a mind to go over his head and report him to his superiors! And besides that, do you know he rejected my request for time off?? He said it was because too many people had already asked off for that day and that he needed me there. How lame is that? I don’t know of anyone who’s asked off for that day! He just said no because he doesn’t like me and is being mean!” Betty tells Sue that she’s sorry but that she has to get back to work. Betty sees Sue at the store later in the week and Sue starts in on Mr. Smith again. Betty thinks she should say something but then again thinks maybe she should just let her vent. Decisions, decisions.

Did either of these ladies do anything wrong? If so, what?

Should Betty say anything to Sue? If so, what should she say?

What Scriptures do either of these ladies need to apply?
